Theresa May joined in with celebrations as the annual Charvil Village Fete returned for another year. The event took place on Saturday.

The Prime Minster joined fete-goers as they enjoyed a beach-themed family fun day at the Charvil Village Fete on Saturday.

Theresa May, who arrived at the annual event with husband Philip, mingled with villagers and stall-holders.

Organised by the Charvil Village Fete Association for the second year running, the event saw more than 600 attendees treated to a host of beach-themed activities including beach volleyball and various cardboard cut-outs for children to put their heads in.

Sarah Stonhold, chair of Charvil Village Fete said: "[We] would like to say a huge thank you to all members of the committee who put in the time and effort to run the event."

Visitors enjoyed live entertainment from band Piston Broke, and for the second year running, 'The Great Charvil Cake Off' kicked off with an action-packed agenda, with one round asking contestants to decorate cupcakes with a beach theme, all of which were judged by Emma from Emma's Kitchen in Twyford, as well as Cllr Jim Gillett, chairman of Charvil Parish Council.

Berkshire Reptile Encounters provided a host of reptiles including a giant tortoise, while the Busy Brushes of Charvil gave children the opportunity to take part in a craft competition.
